Handwritten text in a cursive script, likely a historical document or manuscript. The text is written in a dark ink on aged, slightly discolored paper. The script is dense and fills most of the page, with some lines showing signs of fading or being written over. The text appears to be in a historical or religious context, possibly a letter or a record. The handwriting is fluid and characteristic of a specific historical period, possibly the 17th or 18th century. The paper has a warm, yellowish-brown tone, suggesting age. There are some small dark spots and a faint circular mark on the left side of the page, which could be remnants of a seal or a hole. The overall appearance is that of a well-preserved but aged piece of paper with significant handwritten content.

Handwritten text in a cursive script, likely Persian or Urdu, spanning multiple lines across the page. The text is written in dark ink on aged, slightly discolored paper. There are two prominent dark circular marks, possibly holes or ink blots, located near the center of the page. The script is dense and flowing, characteristic of historical manuscript writing.

1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the problem. It is shown that the problem is of great importance and that it has not been completely solved. The author then presents a new method for solving the problem.
The method is based on the use of the variational principle. It is shown that the method is very simple and that it can be applied to a wide range of problems. The author then gives some numerical results which show that the method is very accurate.
The second part of the paper is devoted to a detailed discussion of the method. It is shown that the method is based on the use of the variational principle. It is shown that the
